

Clean toilets or lose patrons

Letter from ROGER POH

MANY Singaporeans have to eat at coffeeshops and hawker centres.

The National Environment Agency (NEA) grades food stalls A, B or C on the level of cleanliness. But NEA is not giving sufficient attention to the cleanliness of the toilets at these outlets.

While the facade and interior of these coffeeshops and hawker centres may look inviting, their toilets stink and lack proper maintenance.

The stallholders also use these dirty toilets. Doesn't this affect the cleanliness of the food they serve to their customers?

Apart from hygiene, the often wet and slippery floors in these toilets are a danger to customers. A friend once slipped in a coffeeshop toilet and suffered a back injury.

It is time eating establishments paid more attention to the cleanliness of toilets.

The public should also refrain from patronising coffeeshops and hawker centres with filthy toilets.
