

GO EASY ON BLEACH IN PUBLIC TOILETS

 I AM a frequent patron at Taman Serasi Food Garden in the Singapore Botanic Gardens.

When I visited the toilet there, I was disturbed by the strong stench of bleach.

The vapours released by bleach are highly toxic, and inhaling them can be dangerous for people with respiratory problems.

Fainting, nausea or even death could occur if they are exposed to the vapours over a prolonged period.

I urge the authorities to advise the management and staff of public toilets to spare a thought for users with breathing problems.

Cleaners at public toilets should be reminded to use bleach in moderation.
